Immanuel Lutheran Church Cemetery was established in 1892 and the new St. John Lutheran Church Cemetery was established two years later. The two churches merged around 1915 and the cemeteries were combined. The combined cemetery contains about 8.3 acres and is located in San Antonio's Eastside Cemetery District. It is bounded by Dakota, New Braunfels and Wyoming Streets. The entrance is on Dakota Street. The cemetery has two paved north-south roads and a single paved east-west road that form an "H" and divide it into four sections. It is still active and is maintained by St. John's Church. Most gravestones face east. Most of the cemetery is laid out in lots or plots that generally have room for 10 adult graves. Some are easily discernable; some are not. Occasionally two plots have been combined into one larger plot. More often plots have been divided into two, three or four smaller plots. There are a few smaller plots, several larger plots and a couple of sections laid out in single-grave lots. The names of lot owners provided by a map of the cemetery are recorded next to each lot number or partial lot description in [Arial italic type]. The gravestones in the two cemeteries were photographed by Anthony Barbieri. In each plot the front, or east, row of gravestones was photographed first, then the second, or west, row. Information provided by those photographs was transcribed by Janey Eaves Joyce, who also added information from the map of the two cemeteries and their interment records – which are incomplete. Information from the interment records also is recorded in [Arial italic type]. The final transcription was proofed by Mr. Barbieri and Mrs. Joyce in April and May 2009. Although we have provided information about cemetery lot numbers and grave numbers that could be found in the interment records, we did not attempt to record the cemetery in the order of lot or grave numbers.
